DISCUSSION IN THE HOUSE

Acrimonious Passage Over Civil Service Policies Enlivens Day in Congress.

By JOSEPH P. ANNIN.

Fitzgerald of New York, chairman of the House appropriations committee, in the course of a collowy with Repre-sentative Gillett of Massachusetts, a Republican member of the same com-mittee. The second conclusion ag-drawn by Mr. Gillett in a length criti-cism of the attitude of the Democrats hast year and a surcastic comparison be-tween the legislative bill of 1915-13 and that of 3000.

for the Democratic administration pro-are making increases both of force and salary.

"The Appropriations Committee, last year recognized that superanniation was one of the evile of the service. It is one of the evile of the service. It is one of the greatest problems that can be tackled by any committee, and if the Committee on Appropriations would strike out these two evils, would reclassify and would strike out superannuation, they would do annething of permanent value. Chairman Fitzgeraid interrupted to re-mind Mr. Oilliet that the committee had attempted something along the line sug-gested in regard to the superannuation problem, referring to the superannuation problem, referring to the seven-year tru-ture clause.

"Yea, the committee did do it." re-turned Gillett, "but in such a crude and preposterous way that I venture to say they won't dars to repart it when they come into power."

"Up to Cammittee.

"Mr. Chairman." said Mr. Rurieson,

"Mr. Chairman," said Mr. Burleson, replying, to Gillett, "every intelligent member of Congress recognises the fact
